

Duquesne University A.J. Palumbo Center

In today's competitive sport environment, the first impression on a young aspiring athlete can make all the difference in what decisions that person might make.

Excellence in Craftsmanship and attention to detail can help make that first impression a good one. These are some of the reasons why Duquesne University selected Jendoco Construction as its contractor for the A.J. Palumbo Center renovation.

This project involved removing the existing racquetball courts, weight room and ancillary spaces and adding a new third floor mezzanine, a new elevator within the existing building, a new weight training room, hydrotherapy spaces, athletic department offices and film viewing/editing rooms.

Jendoco's role in this project proved to be very instrumental in that no other general contractor responding to the request for proposal submitted an alternate bid for completing this work in four months. Jendoco delivered this very intense remodel on time and on budget.
